Statement of Need

Palliative care is person-centered care for individuals living with a serious illness, and their families. It adds an extra layer of support and interdisciplinary expertise to their care. Dementia refers to a group of cognitive disorders typically characterized by memory impairment, as well as difficulty in the areas of language, motor activity, object recognition, and disturbance of executive function—the ability to plan, organize, and abstract. Dementia is most commonly an illness of older adults. As the population and life spans of the elderly continue to rise, there is greater urgency to address the concerns and issues surrounding dementia. In order to provide optimal quality patient care, health care professionals need to be updated on current therapeutic options and practice strategies addressing: symptom and behavior management, advance care planning, caregiver support, and pathways to knowledge and community resources.

Target Audience

Internal Medicine Physicians, Geriatricians, Physician Assistants, Fellows, Residents, Medical Students, Nurse Practitioners, Registered Nurses, Social Workers, Hospital Chaplains and other Health Care Professionals.

Educational Objectives

It is intended that this NewYork-Presbyterian/Queens CME activity will lead to improved patient care. At the conclusion of this symposium, the participant will be able to:

- ▶ Discuss diagnostic criteria for minor and major neurocognitive disorders.
- ▶ Review easy to use screening tools for memory and executive function.
- ▶ Specify indications for, and limitations of, pharmacotherapy for neurocognitive disorders.
- ▶ Describe the continuum of long term care services and resources available in NYC.
- ▶ Examine the needs and impact on family caregivers.
- ▶ Explain concepts related to legal capacity, guardianship, and the court's role in persons lacking capacity.
